

Dear Commissioner Jane Henney,

As a governmental "watchdog" agency I urge you to see the common sense of removing all genetically engineered foods and crops from the market and subject them to safety-testing. I support the Organic Consumers Association's petition calling for the same action. It is your job to stop the human experiment which subjects the American public with controversial food products of which nobody can be sure the long term effects.

Evidence emerges constantly to suggest the modification of produce and livestock with bacterial toxins and hormones has degrading effects on human health and the environment. Untold consequences are bound to arise. Unforeseeable complications, proving when we're not 100% sure it is best to back off. Yet these genetically modified organisms and hormone ridden animal products continue to reach market. The situation always reminds me of the American enthusiasm for the chemical DDT in the 1950's as children were lined up in cheering masses and sprayed with the toxin.

I urge you to do all in your power to remove all genetically engineered foods and crops from the market until more testing is implemented and evidence is reached.

Sincerely,

Seth Myers
